Biographies

Barbara Aranda-Naranjo, PhD, RN, FAAN

Dr. Aranda-Naranjo has been a community health researcher and public health nurse with more than 25 years of experience in the promotion of health and the prevention of disease in underserved, resilient communities at both the local, state and national level. She has extensive “front-line” experience in planning, developing, and coordinating research investigation and program evaluation related to health care delivery with African American and Hispanic American populations especially women and children living with HIV disease. She has an effective record establishing collaboration among federal, state, and local stakeholders related to people living with co-morbidities such as substance abuse, mental illness and STDs, primarily HIV/AIDS.

Currently, Dr. Aranda-Naranjo is the first Robert and Kathleen Scanlon Endowed Chair in Values Based Health Care at the School of Nursing & Health Studies (NHS) at Georgetown University in Washington D.C. In this role she provides leadership in integrating the core values of excellence and social justice in the research, teaching, and service activities for faculty at NHS. She is also the Program Director for a new project she co-founded with her nursing students entitled, Nurses for America. This innovative program was funded in August 2005 by AmeriCorp and is focused on placing professional nurses for a two year commitment to serve in community health clinics and public health departments that serve vulnerable, resilient populations. The nurses receive mentoring from Georgetown Nursing faculty and an educational stipend of more than $9000 to pay off their student loans or start graduate school.

Prior to coming to Georgetown, Dr. Aranda-Naranjo spent five years working at HRSA in the HIV/AIDS bureau and served in the following positions: the Branch Chief for Special Projects of National Significance, the Deputy Director for the Division of Community Based programs, and the Acting Director of the Division of Science and Policy. In these roles she was both innovative and tenacious in ensuring that the funding of new projects was sensitized by not only the voices of the health care providers but the people living with HIV/AIDS.

Dr. Aranda-Naranjo is best known for her leadership in developing the South Texas AIDS Center for children and families with her colleagues at the University of Texas Health Science Center in San Antonio in 1988, funded by HRSA. This Center, after 18 years, continues to exist today as the South Texas Family AIDS Network (STFAN) housed at the University Health System. The goal of STFAN has remained the same: to provide culturally competent quality care and coordinate support services to individuals and families living with HIV/AIDS to improve physical, spiritual and emotional well-being.

Rheta Barnes, MPH, MSN

Rheta Barnes received her Master of Public Health (MPH) and her Master of Science in Nursing (MSN) degrees from Emory University in 1999. Her concentration in the MPH program was health education and behavioral science. Her concentration in the MSN program was the family nurse practitioner track. She came to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) in 1999 as a fellow and then as a health scientist in the Health Services Research and Evaluation Branch of the Division of STD Prevention (DSTDP). She worked on two major projects there: the Feasibility of STD Control for HIV Prevention demonstration projects and the National Survey of Health Care Providers' HPV Knowledge, Attitudes and Practices. In 2003, she joined DSTDP's Training and Health Communications Branch as a health education specialist, serving as a project officer with the STD/HIV Prevention Training Centers (PTCs) and working on other health professional training and education projects, including the development of web-based STD curricular materials for clinicians and clinical educators. In 2006, she became the chief of the Health Professions Training and Education Unit in DSTDP's Program and Training Branch (proposed). She provides oversight for STD training programs and projects, including the PTCs and DSTDP's training for STD Program staff.

Christopher H. Bates, MPA

In August 2002, Christopher H. Bates was appointed Acting Director for the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services' Office of HIV/AIDS Policy. He is a Senior Health Program Analyst, who also served as the National Director for a departmental initiative known as the Rapid Assessment Response and Evaluation (RARE). Before joining the Office of HIV/AIDS Policy, Mr. Bates worked as a consultant with the John Snow, Inc., conducting a feasibility study on the integration of STD, HIV, and drug abuse services for a proposed national demonstration project. From 1997 through 1998 he served as interim Director of the City of Philadelphia HIV Commission.

From 1991 through 1997, Mr. Bates was the Executive Director of the D.C. Comprehensive AIDS Resources and CARE Consortium. The Consortium is an alliance of local organizations and institutions that provide HIV/AIDS services and education in the District of Columbia. Before 1991, Mr. Bates enjoyed a successful 11-year career as a program director and in various management positions with the District of Columbia government.

Over the past 20 years, Mr. Bates has served on numerous national and local boards and commissions. Mr. Bates is a founding member of the DC Primary Care Association. He also served as a member of the Board of the Washington Consortium of Agencies, a six-year member of the Executive Committee of the Metropolitan Washington Ryan White Title Planning Council, a member of the Mayor's Health Policy Advisory Committee and past chair of the Mayor's AIDS Advisory Committee. He is an acknowledged national advocate for AIDS, as well as a provocative civic, gay/lesbian activist in the District of Columbia. He is a graduate of the University of Michigan and holds an MPA from Southeastern University in Washington, D.C.

Sheana Bull, PhD, MPH

Dr. Sheana Bull is a researcher with the University of Colorado at Denver and Health Sciences Center. Her work is focused on the development and testing of technology based interventions for health promotion, including HIV prevention for Men Who have Sex with Men and for Young Adults. Her presentation is focused on what we currently know about online interventions to promote safer sexual behaviors, family planning and prevention of substance abuse.

Lori de Ravello, MPH

Lori de Ravello, MPH, is a Public Health Advisor with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) assigned to the Indian Health Service's National STD Program in Albuquerque, New Mexico. Since December 2003, Ms. de Ravello has been jointly-funded by CDC's Divisions of STD Prevention and Reproductive Health to support the integration of STD, HIV, and reproductive health services to improve the health status of American Indians and Alaska Natives.

Ms. de Ravello has worked for CDC since 1993, both domestically and internationally. She has worked on a wide range of projects, including management development and training, family planning, managed care, safe motherhood, HIV prevention, services integration, training-related efforts, information technology, informatics, and surveillance. She served as a Project Officer for DRH's HIV Integration Project with the RTCs from 1996-2001. During her assignment to IHS, she was worked with the PTCs, AETCs, and ATTCs to support training efforts in Indian Country.

Ms. de Ravello has a bachelor's degree in international relations from the University of New Mexico (1989) and a master's degree in international public health from the University of Alabama at Birmingham (1993). She served as a Peace Corps Volunteer in Honduras (1990-1991).

Linda Frank, PhD, MSN, ACRN

Linda Frank, PhD, MSN, ACRN is Assistant Professor, Infectious Diseases and Microbiology, Department of Infectious Diseases, Graduate School of Public Health, University of Pittsburgh. She also serves as the Principal Investigator and Executive Director of the Pennsylvania/MidAtlantic AIDS Education and Training Center (PA/MA AETC) which she had been directing since 1988. She also directs the Communicable Disease & Behavioral Health MPH Program, Department of Infectious Diseases at the Graduate School of Public Health, University of Pittsburgh.

Dr. Frank's research has included studies addressing barriers to care and HIV treatment adherence in collaboration with the Pennsylvania Departments of Health and Public Welfare. She has also conducted a multisite study on the outcomes of AETC clinical consultation and specific outcome studies on clinical training of health care providers. Since 2003, she has worked in conducting HIV training and consultation in the Russian Federation.

In 2000, Dr. Frank received the HIV/AIDS Bureau's Outstanding Performance Award from HRSA for her work within the AETC program. In 2001, she received the Distinguished Alumni Award from the Pennsylvania State University, School of Nursing, in 2002 the HIV/AIDS Educator Award from the Association of Nurses in AIDS Care and in 2004, the Distinguished Alumni Award from the University of Pittsburgh, School of Nursing.

She is currently on numerous advisory boards including the Pennsylvania Department of Health's, CDC HIV Prevention Statewide Planning Committee; the Pennsylvania Ryan HIV Planning Council, the Southwest Pennsylvania AIDS Planning Coalition, and a former board member of the Pittsburgh AIDS Task Force.

Nationally, she serves as a member of the Board of Directors of AIDS Action Council in Washington, D.C., and is currently the co-chair of the AIDS Action Council's Public Policy Committee. She served on the national HIV/AIDS Nursing Certification Board from 1996 -2000. She has been the co-chair of the Governmental Affairs Committee of the National Association of AIDS Education and Training Centers since 1995.

Dr. Frank is a contributing author in two publications that have been distributed nationally and worldwide, the Jail and Prison Health Standards, published in 2003 by the American Public Health Association, and A Guide to Primary Care of People with HIV/AIDS, published by the HRSA, Bureau of HIV/AIDS in 2004.

Thomas E. Freese, PhD

Thomas E. Freese (PhD in Clinical Psychology, California School of Professional Psychology, 1995) is currently the Director of Training for UCLA Integrated Substance Abuse Programs (ISAP) and the Director of the Pacific Southwest Addictions Technology Transfer Center (PSATTC). He has been a featured presenter at conferences and meetings nationally and internationally on the impact and treatment of methamphetamine. He has chaired two of the NIDA/SAMHSA Blending Teams, developing training products on the use of buprenorphine in treating opioid dependence. He has served as the Project Director on a number of studies including research on methamphetamine use, HIV risk in gay/bisexual men, and smoking cessation interventions. Dr. Freese has worked in the substance abuse field since 1983. He oversees the NIDA Institutional Training Grant and has planned and implemented major CSAT and NIDA-funded conferences. He has developed and conducted trainings in 30 states and directs all of the UCLA ISAP in-house trainings. He has provided clinical training and workshops for clinicians-in-training at the all levels.

Jamie Hart, PhD, MPH

Dr. Jamie Hart is the Director of the Intercultural Health Practice Area at Health Systems Research, Inc. Dr. Hart directs two newly awarded Office of HIV/AIDS Policy (OHAP) contracts to assess HIV-related TA throughout the Department of Health and Human Services and to work with 10 Regional Resource Coordinators across the country to deliver TA and training to community and faith-based organizations to address HIV/AIDS. She also directs two Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA) contracts focusing on Ryan White Comprehensive AIDS Resources Emergency Act Grantees' efforts to recruit and retain people of color who are HIV positive in care and ability to assess the severity of need for programs and services and distributing funds accordingly. In addition, she currently directs the Homeless Policy Academies Initiative, jointly funded by several Federal agencies, and offers training and technical assistance for a systems-change project jointly that brings together state teams of policy-makers and practitioners to integrate their various systems to improve access to services for people experiencing homelessness. Previously, Dr. Hart has also served as the Director for several Office of Population Affairs (OPA) assessment projects within Title X clinics on the integration of HIV prevention, the use of couples-based services, and the delivery of clinical training for providers. She also served as Deputy Project Director and Lead Trainer on a collaborative cross-training project to promote systems change and decrease stigma within substance abuse, infectious disease, mental health, and criminal justice system. She has facilitated numerous expert panel and workgroup meetings on topics such as co-occurring disorders, cultural competency in service delivery to people who are homeless and have mental illnesses, and discharge planning from criminal justice, behavioral health, primary care, and foster care systems.

While at the University of Michigan, Dr. Hart worked on issues related to multicultural teaching and conducted her dissertation research on reproductive health and access to health care for African American women. Her previous work also includes experience as a research assistant on CDC's Project REACH (Racial and Ethnic Approaches to Community Health) and a program officer for multicultural affairs the Great Lakes Colleges Association. She holds a MPH in Health Behavior and Health Education, along with an MA and PhD in United States history, with a specialization in African American history. Her dissertation research focused on reproductive health and access to health care for African American women.

Joan Helmich, MA

Joan Helmich is the Training Director for the Center for Health Training in Seattle, providing training, technical assistance and research services to public and private health and human service organizations in the Northwest. She has a Master's degree in Applied Behavioral Sciences and expertise in the areas of organization development, sexuality education, family planning, and public health training. She has worked in a variety of capacities in public health and human services for 34 years. She is co-author, with Evonne Hedgepeth, of Teaching About Sexuality and HIV: Principles and Methods for Effective Education, New York University Press, 1996. She is on the board of SIECUS, the Sexuality Information and Education Council of the US.

Debbie Isenberg, MPH, CHES

Debbie Isenberg, MPH, CHES, is the Director of the Center for Applied Research and Evaluation Studies at the Southeast AIDS Training and Education Center (SEATEC) at Emory University in Atlanta, Georgia. She has more than 15 years' experience in the field of evaluation. She has worked with federal, state, local government, and community partners on a variety of studies focused on improving the quality of care for underserved populations. Ms. Isenberg also serves as the Associate Director of Research and Evaluation at the Southeast AIDS Training and Education Center (SEATEC), Emory University School of Medicine. In this role, Ms. Isenberg is responsible for developing and implementing appropriate evaluation programs for the clinical training program in a six-state region. She has extensive experience in developing measures, identifying indicators and outcomes, and participating in a national training data project. She has also developed an extensive continuous quality improvement program to assure appropriate implementation of trainings and to monitor training quality and impact. Prior to working at SEATEC, Ms. Isenberg was a health educator at the Washoe County District Health Department in Reno, Nevada and was responsible for providing technical assistance on evaluation for local HIV prevention programs.

Marsha Martin, DSW

Marsha Martin, DSW, brings more than 20 years of public health and social service experience to the District of Columbia Government. Dr. Martin is a former executive director of AIDS Action, a Washington, D.C.-based advocacy group that promoted a national policy to strengthen HIV/AIDS prevention, care, treatment, and social services.

From 1997 to 2001, Dr. Martin served as the special assistant on HIV/AIDS policy to Secretary Donna Shalala at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). At HHS, Dr. Martin developed and implemented the Leadership Dialogue on HIV/AIDS, created and co-chaired the Secretary's Working Group for Women and HIV/AIDS, and served as a liaison to the Department's broad constituencies.

Before joining HHS, Dr. Martin was the coordinator for homeless veterans' initiatives at the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs, as well as the executive director of the Federal Interagency Council on the Homeless at the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. She has served as director of the Mayor's Office on Homelessness & SRO Housing in New York City, under Mayor David Dinkins. Dr. Martin also served as an Associate Professor at the Hunter College School of Social Work from 1985 to 1995. She has been a consultant to the National Resource Center on Homelessness and Mental Illness, a center established by National Institute for Mental Health.

A native of Iowa City, Iowa, Dr. Martin received an undergraduate degree in psychology and a master's degree in social work from Columbia University. She earned her DSW from Columbia University's School of social work in 1982.

Susan Moskosky, MS, RNC

Susan Moskosky, Director of the Office of Family Planning in the Office of Population Affairs, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, is responsible for administration, as well as program and policy development and implementation for the national Title X Family Planning Program. She assumed the position of Director, Office of Family Planning, in January 2001. Prior to that, she served as the Deputy Director of the Office of Family Planning. Before moving to Washington, D.C., to work in the Office of Population Affairs, Ms. Moskosky served as the Regional Program Consultant for Family Planning in Region VII, Kansas City and was also the Region VII PHS Women's Health Coordinator. She is a certified Women's Health Nurse Practitioner, and prior to Federal employment, spent 15 years teaching nurse practitioner students and providing family planning, prenatal and other related preventive health services in maternal health and family planning clinics in Dallas, Texas. She directed the Women's Health Care Advanced Nurse Practitioner Program at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center at Dallas, which was one of the five nurse practitioner programs funded by Title X for many years. She has served on a number of boards of professional associations, and has served as contributing editor for a number of professional journals. She was editor of the Women's Health Care Nurse Practitioner Certification Review Guide published in 1995. Ms. Moskosky received her Bachelor of Science degree in Nursing from Baylor University and a Master of Science in Maternal-Child Nursing from Texas Women's University and maintains a professional certification through NCC as a Women's Health Care Nurse Practitioner.

Beny J. Primm, MD

Dr. Primm has been the Executive Director of the Addiction Research and Treatment Corporation (A.R.T.C.) of Brooklyn, New York since its inception in 1969. As one of the largest minority non-profit community based substance abuse treatment programs in the country, the A.R.T.C. provides a multi-modality service and treatment program for approximately twenty-three-hundred men and women who are primarily members of severely underserved populations. Pursuant to the corporation's commitment to treatment related research, collaborative endeavors are currently in progress with the National Institute on Drug Abuse Administration.

Since 1983, Dr. Primm has served as President of the Urban Resource Institute, a non-profit organization that was established to provide supportive social and medical services to critical populations within New York City. Among them are multi-service shelters for battered women and their children, intermediate care facilities and other services for mentally challenged individuals, and out-patient alcoholic treatment services.

In recognition of his world-renowned authority on the Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV), addiction and AIDS, Dr. Primm was appointed to the Presidential Commission of the Human Immunodeficiency Virus Epidemic in 1987. In that capacity, Dr. Primm represented the U.S. at a meeting of the World Health Organization (W.H.O.), Geneva, Switzerland, and at the International Conference for Ministers of Health on AIDS Prevention in London.

Dr. Primm has served special committees on drug and alcohol problems for the W.H.O. on several occasions and has represented state and federal governments at special meetings in other European, and African countries, and the Caribbean. He is the chairman of the Board of Directors of the National Minority AIDS Council and is the 1st vice chairman of the National Black Leadership Commission on AIDS.

Dr. Primm has been a frequent consultant to the Drug Abuse Policy Office of the White House, beginning with the Nixon Administration, which established the first National Drug Policy Office. In 1989 Dr. Primm was appointed by the Secretary of Health and Human Services to direct the Federal government's Center for Substance Abuse Treatment (CSAT), formerly known as the Office for Treatment Improvement (OTI). In that capacity Dr. Primm was responsible for the development of programs, policies and initiatives relating to the treatment of addictive disorders and the improvement of the quality and effectiveness of substance abuse treatment as well as treatment capacity expansion for the United States and its territories. Dr. Primm's tenure as director of CSAT ended in May 1993.

Dr. Primm is widely published in treatment of drug abuse and related disorders in peer journals and textbooks. He has presented testimonies on the medical, social and political consequences of substance abuse before the United States Congress and Senate. He has lectured at colleges, universities, in ecumenical settings, before organizations representing the medical, and psycho-social disciplines, the business community, political representatives, and community organizations.

Dr. Primm is known nationally and internationally for his total commitment to substance abuse treatment and the treatment of the psychological, social and economic ills that fuel that disease. He teaches that all treatment modalities can be effective, that drug treatment must be mainstreamed with other human focused disciplines and finally that integration of those disciplines is the bedrock for effective treatment.

He is the recipient of numerous awards and in November 2000, was granted the Surgeon General's Medallion for U.S. Public Health Service for his lifetime of leadership in mental health and substance abuse treatment in the battle against the AIDS Epidemic. In March 2002, he received the Governor's Distinguished Citizen Award from the State of West Virginia. He was also granted the President's Scholar Award from West Virginia State College. In August 6, 2003, Dr. Primm was appointed to the Presidential Advisory Council on HIV and AIDS (PACHA). The Advisory Council provides advice and recommendations to the President and Health and Human Services Secretary, on research, prevention and treatment of people living with HIV/AIDS.

Dr. Primm earned his medical degree from the University of Geneva, Geneva, Switzerland.

Steven R. Young, MSPH

Mr. Young holds a Master of Science in Public Health from the University of Massachusetts in health administration and community health. He started out as community-based clinic coordinator and educator for the Monmouth County Health Department, Freehold, NJ. He served as Project Director of Robert Wood Johnson Foundation AIDS Health Services Program in Newark and Jersey City, NJ, and as Director of the Care and Treatment Unit, Division of AIDS Prevention and Control at the New Jersey State Department of Health. Mr. Young was instrumental in establishing a statewide system of early intervention clinics, variety of HIV services within substance abuse treatment centers, community coalition development and responsive regulatory and reimbursement initiatives to support community-based HIV care.

At the Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA) during the last fifteen years, he served as Deputy Chief - Planning and Technical Assistance Branch; Chief - Eastern Services Branch; Acting Deputy Director - Division of Service Systems, overseeing implementation and administration of Titles I and II of the Ryan White CARE Act; and Deputy Director - Office of Science and Epidemiology, HIV/AIDS Bureau, helping to oversee efforts in CARE Act data collection/analysis, program evaluation and special projects of national significance.

He is presently serving as the Director of the Division of Training and Technical Assistance, overseeing the AIDS Education and Training Centers Program and cross-cutting TA efforts for the Ryan White CARE Act. Most recently he served as the HRSA Project Director on the Institute of Medicine study Measuring What Matters: Allocation, Planning and Quality Assessment for the Ryan White CARE Act. He has published a variety of papers on the development and organization of community-based HIV care.

Marianne Zotti, DrPH, MS, FAAN

Dr. Zotti has a rich public health practice background in family planning and in state health department maternal and child health programs. She has a Master's of Science in community health nursing and a Doctor of Public Health in Maternal and Child Health from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. She is also a Fellow of the American Academy of Nursing. Prior to working for CDC, Dr. Zotti held faculty and administrative positions in academia. In 1999 she joined the Applied Sciences Branch in the Division of Reproductive Health at CDC to serve as the Maternal and Child Health Epidemiologist assignee to the Mississippi Department of Health where she served until 2005. The focus of her work was to build MCH epidemiology and data capacity at state and local levels. Since 2005, Dr. Zotti has served as the Team Leader of the Services Management, Research and Translation (SMART) team. This team has cooperative agreements with Regional Training Centers (RTCs) in all 10 HHS regions to promote integration of HIV prevention services in reproductive health settings.
